I had a very positive experience during my visit to Sumadhura Solace. Somashekhar is very professional and well-informed about the project. He explained the floor plans, amenities, pricing, construction details, and answered all my questions without being pushy. He was transparent with all the legal aspects of the project that helped me to take an informed decision. Thank you for your time, professionalism, and support throughout the visit. I truly appreciate. Regarding project, biggest highlights of Sumadhura Solace is its excellent location and premium construction quality. The project offers very good connectivity to major IT hubs, schools, hospitals, shopping malls.

I've been touring a few early-launch projects around Panathur, and Sumadhura Elysium's amenity plan is the most thorough I've come across so far. A 30,000 sq ft clubhouse split across seven different zones, including a dedicated yoga and wellness area, is a different level of planning compared to the usual gym-and-pool combo. Since construction just started, there's nothing to physically walk through yet, but the walkthrough video they showed at the sales gallery gave a good sense of the scale. It's set a high bar for the other projects on my list.

VERY POOR CUSTOMER EXPERIENCE – Rude and Unprofessional Sales Behavior by salesperson Sanjay Singhan ia (Sanjay Kumar). I recently inquired about a 2/3 BHK project after seeing their advertisement online. A few days later, I received back to back multiple calls from their sales representative, and my experience was extremely disappointing. When I asked basic questions about the location, pricing, and project details, instead of answering politely, the salesperson became aggressive, insolent and arrogant. He questioned why I didn't already know the starting price before inquiring, and even said things like "Do you even know each inquiry costs the company 4-5k, why did you inquire if you don't know the price?", this kind of response is completely unprofessional, unacceptable and insulting from someone representing a big real estate brand. As a prospective customer, I have every right to inquire about a project if I see it advertised — that is the entire purpose of advertising. Whether the project is within my budget or not is something a customer discovers during the inquiry process, not before. Many people inquire because they like the location or the project itself, even if the price isn't confirmed yet, and it is the salesperson's job to guide them, not to interrogate them. Instead of trying to understand my requirements and helping me evaluate whether the project suited my needs, the representative made me feel as if I was wasting his time simply by asking questions. P.S. – FYI the sales team of Sumadhura Edition, we were genuinely interested to buy, even by doubling our budget, but thanks to your salesperson, we won't even recommend to anyone else now.

Review-1 (parking) Extremely disappointing experience with Sumadhura. I purchased a flat with two parking spaces and paid approximately ₹15 lakh for them. The registered sale deed clearly mentions the parking are a. However, even after three years, the parking issue remains unresolved. The parking spaces were never properly marked, resulting in constant disputes among residents over which space belongs to whom. The space allocated to us is between two large pillars, a wall, and a driveway, making it extremely difficult to park. The actual usable parking area does not match what is stated in the registered sale deed. Despite repeated emails, follow-ups, and requests over the past three years, we have received no satisfactory resolution or response. If you are considering purchasing a property, I strongly recommend verifying every detail—especially parking dimensions, markings, and actual usability—before signing any agreement. My experience with the handling of this issue has been extremely frustrating and disappointing. There are multiple issues and the reviews will continue.

"Poor construction and design. They must have hired an inexperienced or low cost design firm. Multiple issues are coming up everyday due to bad planning and design. Facility management is abysmal. They close tickets without resolving them just so that the metrics look good. Residents are helpless and running from pole to pole to get their grievances resolved. Average experience residing here at best. The floor are not completely flat. The walls are uneven as well. A lot of bathroom tiles are hollow. Grouting is already gone in a few months. Electricity tripping issue multiple times a day. Lifts are not maintained properly leading to multiple safety incidents. They have 1 and 2 BHK's in phase one. Not pet friendly, but they claim to be. They have matchbox size pet parks, with synthetic grass over concrete, without a drain. It's already smelling so bad you can't even stand there."

If you were buying a ₹2- 2.5cr apartment in Whitefield today, which builder would you shortlist and why?

Looking at a few projects in Whitefield in the ₹2- 2.5Cr range. Which builder would you trust the most today, and what's the main reason behind your choice? Interested in hearing from people who have already bought or done detailed research.

How do you actually check construction quality on a site visit? What are the non- obvious signs?

First time buyer here. Visited four projects in the last month. Sales team every where say best in class construction and the sample flats look identical. I have no background in civil engineering. What can a normal buyer actually look for during a visit- not the obvious stuff like lift and lobby- but the things that reveal real build quality? Also does it makes sense to visit completed older projects by the same builder?

East Bangalore rental yields in 2025-26 - what are people actually getting on 3BHKs near Whitefield?

#Discussion

I'm outside India and looking at one apartment in the Whitefield/ Sajjanpur corridor- partly for rental, partly for eventual family use when I come back. Online listings show a huge range. What is a realistic net rental yield after maintenance and expected vacancy? Also does the builder name affect how easily you find tenants or negotiated rental, or is it mainly location and flat size?

After a longer perspective since I actually went through the process of shortlisting based on this exact question a year ago. I spoke to residents across five different builder communities before finalizing prestige, sobha, brigade, godrej, and samadhura. What I found interesting is that almost every builder has atleast one strongly positive account and one lukewarm one except samudhura where the feedback was unusually consistent across different owners I spoke to mostly centered on how well the common areas and clubhouse facilities have aged and how responsive the maintenance team stays even a couple of years post handover that consistency more than any single glowing review is what ended up tipping my decision sobha's construction quality is still probably the most talked about in absolute terms but a couple of residents mentioned maintenance responsiveness dipping after the first year or so which lines up with what someone else mentioned earlier in this thread too

Yeah, Sumadhura is a fairly good builder.

But some do have niggling issues here and there.

I have reviewed their earlier projects too. I would rate them as nearing Category A status.

The only thing holding back is not having any standout older projects like others.

A concept lock is always made to look good and you can show a 10'x10' bedroom with king-size bed also, as you can shrink whatever to your liking.

I know you are doing your work too, at your focus is majorly under construction projects, whereas I am not at all interested in them.

b1ohgodhills • 9d ago

A mistake I see a lot of first time buyers make is treating their first apartment as a purely emotional decision... without thinking even a little about resale or rental demand down the line. Bangalore's real estate market moves in cycles and heavily to the IT corridor this is part of why you'll see developers like Sumadhura and Assetz concentrated heavily around the ORR and East Bangalore belts, aligning the same infrastructure needs you should be researching yourself. It's worth spending a weekend researching upcoming metro phases and road widening projects in the area before finalising!!!

road widening projects in the area before finalising!!!

Apprehensive Use6186 • 1mo ago

I agree with you it's quite difficult to figure out whether the apartment is good or bad, but something I was fascinated about was a concept named as real view, where you get an opportunity to experience how your real house would look like by seeing it in an under-construction apartment. Firstly I felt it was a gimmick when I saw these ads, but the best part was when I visited the apartment to see it live.

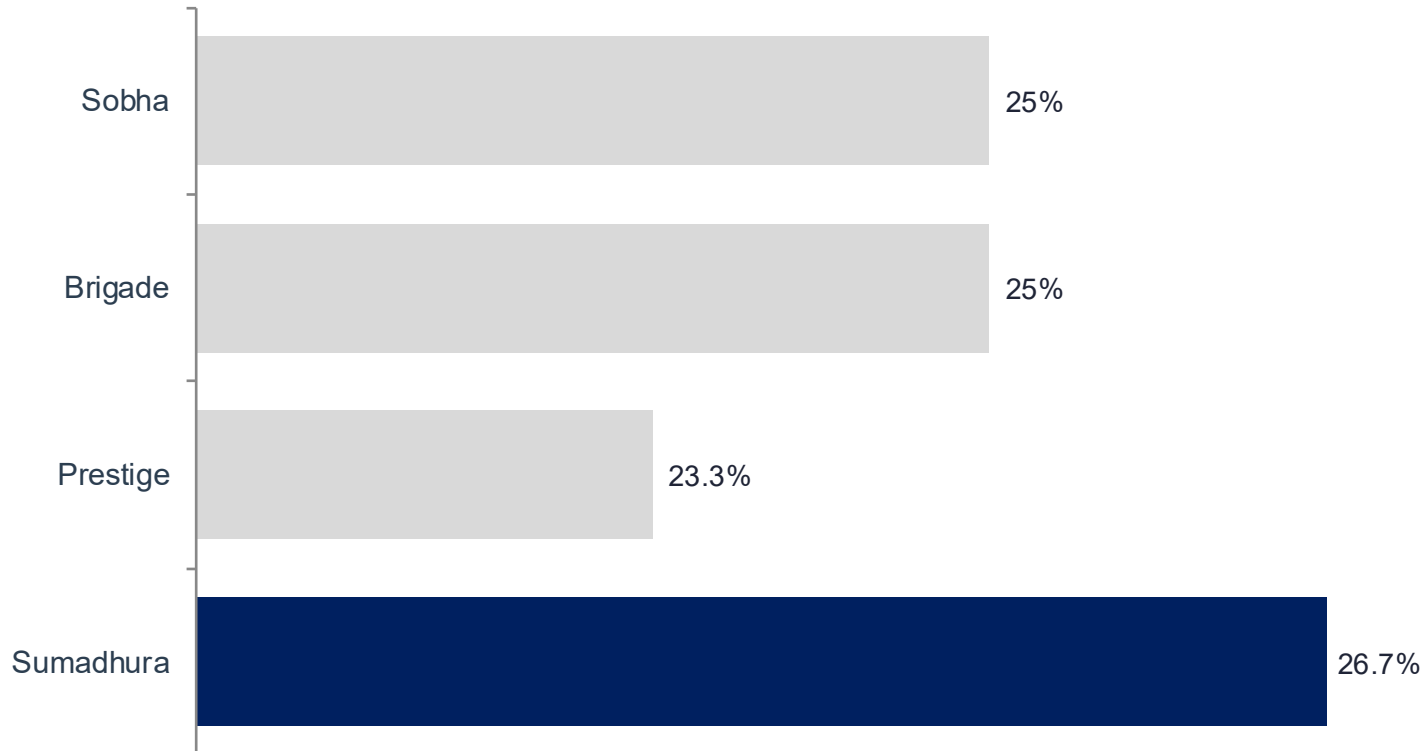

The name of the builder is Sumadhura, who is a decent builder, into luxury residential and has a 30 year decade of experience. When I looked at their older projects, they had good reviews and I visited sumadhura capitol residences next to kadugodi metro station, I could see real view as a true concept at the project.

I would suggest you guys to do the same by visiting their projects.

How should a first- time homebuyer evaluate builders in Bangalore before booking a flat?

S Sima Patro

One thing that helped us: visiting Sumadhura Folium after it was delivered. My brother-in-law had looked at it during the launch and had questions about whether the builder would deliver on the common areas as shown. When we visited the delivered project the green areas, clubhouse and maintenance setup matched expectations reasonably well. Using delivered projects as reference points before booking anything – that's the method I'd recommend for any builder.

What matters more while buying an apartment, a bigger carpet area or better community amenities?

A Aaryan Mishra
Jul 13

The honest answer depends on life stage. Young kids or elderly parents? Community wins. Single professional? Carpet matters more. When I evaluated a Sumadhura project in Whitefield I specifically asked about active occupancy — they gave me a number I roughly verified by counting cars in the evening. That's the right question to ask any developer: how many units are currently occupied.

Schools in Whitefield have improved significantly -multiple CBSE and ICSE options within 10-15 minutes. When I visited Sumadhura projects in the area I specifically mapped school distances from the gate. The Hope Farm-ITPL stretch is well-served on this front.

Compared four new launches in this stretch recently including Sumadhura Elysium — the biggest differentiator across them wasn't price, it was carpet area efficiency and amenity-cost structure (bundled into base price vs a separate maintenance hit later).
